If you remember, Tom-- something hard rose in her throat, but she gulped it down-- If you remember, I told you that you were perfectly free to choose. But this is all nonsense, he cried. I haven t done a thing except to lose my job. Jane s lips quivered. She fixed her eyes on the wall beyond. Through the mist that dimmed them, glimmered and danced a vision, all in brilliant blue, framed in the dark doorway. Amy s picture had not been lost. The trembling lips drew together into a colorless line. Jane. Her father s voice rasped impatiently from the landing above. Jane s lips parted numbly. I m afraid-- she panted in a hoarse whisper, and stopped short, seeking for words and tones which should disguise her jealousy and cover up a strange, sudden weakness which shamed her before Tom. When she spoke again, her voice rang in her ears with a curious, conventional coldness. I m afraid, she repeated, that you still lack--character. She moved forward. Tom stepped aside. Listen, Jane, he cried despairingly. If you leave me like this, I won t be responsible for what I do. She hesitated once again, and again her father s summons sounded. Now she had left the room, and Tom could hear each footfall as she slowly mounted the stairs. He fell into a chair and buried his face in his hands. Very well, if that...
