There were runnings to and fro, and a great deal of inharmonious grunting; dogs were barking, cats were mewing, mice were mumbling, cows lowing, donkeys braying, horses neighing, and sheep bleating. Suddenly the noise ceased, all except the grunting, which now seemed close to the door of the Banqueting Room; in a little while it became deafening, and ladies and gentlemen had to use speaking-trumpets to hear it! Angry voices were heard, especially the sonorous tones of the Butcher-General, and presently, when the grunting really seemed as if it would shake down the palace walls, the welcome tingle-tingle was heard. Widely was the door flung open, and in rushed a splendid boar. He sprang on to the table, ran up the nearest passage, shook off his head on to...
