Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .ascertain whether the maximum and minimum thermometers are registering properly, and should be made at all third class observatories, i.e., observatories at which 8 A.M. observations only are recorded. It is not necessary for second class observers to make test observations of this kind, as the 10 and 16 hours observations, if taken in accordance with the instructions recently issued, usually show whether the maximum and minimum thermometers register correctly. The following is the rule laid down in the Hints to observers, given in the daily note-book of 8 A.M. observations, for these test observations: --Test the maximum and minimum thermometers once a month to ascertain if they register properly, according to the instructions issued for that purpose. In order to do this observers at third class observatories should, at least once a month, read (but not set) the maximum thermometer shortly before sunset and compare the maximum temperature of that day as thus obtained with the reading as recorded at 8 A.M., next morning, and enter the readings in one of the forms supplied for these test observations. If the two readings differ by less than half a degree, it may be assumed the instrument is registering properly. If the difference is a degree or upwards, a brief note to that effect should be entered in the last page of the monthly register, and the Simla or Calcutta Office will, after going through the observations for that month sent in Form E, decide whether it...
