You will not find in me the serpent s wile, And yet like him I change both skin and hue, And show myself in quite another style, So that men know me not, I seem so new. Then the whole company gave up guessing, unless an ingenious pe itc-maitresse burst out with an tuitixa, in a cry of joy, and produced her Fan as a solution of the problem. Rabener, in his Satyres, in the chapter headed Means to Discover by Exterior Signs Secret Thoughts, has but given a superficial idea of the language of Fans in these few lines which we translate: -- A woman who criticises the dress of those of...
