Here is a suggestive extract from one of the Ashton essays: -- The neighbourhood of Dunstable is noted for its skylarks. They are caught in large nets, often carried by two men. Professional Markers start their occupation about seven o'clock at night, and do not cease before one or two in the morning. During that time they can catch from 300 to 400 larks. These are sent to London, some alive in cages, and some dead ready to be sold in the poultry shops. It is reported that about 50,000 larks...
