Excerpt: . . . law, and so it is generally enacted that every person falsely making a solemn afiirmation shall be deemed to have committed perjury. 1 2 Quar. L. 1. 312. Fictions of relation, the third class in the classification attempted, have made themselves a part of the law. The discussion is not open as to their general utility, or whether they have justified their being, or outlived their usefulness. The doctrine of relation has become a part of the legal instinct of every common lawyer. It pervades every branch of the law, and to destroy it would necessitate the recasting of the entire body. Fictions of relation have been divided into four kinds: 1--1st. Where the act of one person is taken to be the act of another. Example: The act or possession of the servant equivalent to the act or possession of the master; felonious...
